1. Status of negotiations

ANMF members’ actions and support for the #ValueRecogniseReward campaign are having a positive effect. Don’t underestimate the power of the red T-shirt.

ANMF has continued negotiations with the Department of Health and Human Services, the Victorian Hospitals’ Industrial Association and the Health and Community Services Union. ANMF would like more frequent meetings to hasten the progress of negotiations. As a result of members’ efforts and participation in the protected industrial action the parties around the table are more focused on negotiating an outcome. Three further items from our log of claims have been agreed in principle making a total of 19 clauses agreed.

ANMF has also progressed, with the assistance of former Fair Work Commission Deputy President Greg Smith, in presenting a united front on some ANMF and HACSU claims. This includes an appropriate provision for community workload management. Discussions continue.

The challenge remains securing mental health nursing ratios. We are also focusing on ensuring the general nurses’ wage outcome applies to mental health nurses from the same 1 April 2016 date. Both of these key issues will require the involvement of Health and Human Services Department decision makers and ANMF is pressing for direct negotiations with them at the earliest opportunity.

Further negotiations are scheduled for 22 June.

2. Stage 2 of industrial action advice for members, particularly first timers

ANMF is supporting members who are implementing stage 2 industrial action at the 12 eligible area mental health services. See the list on page 3.

Mental health nurses are not taking protected industrial action lightly, but it is essential the employers and the government understand you are serious about your claims for ratios in inpatient services, better community workload management and fair pay. If you require ANMF assistance please contact your ANMF Organiser.

ANMF is aware of some instances where members are feeling pressured to not wear the red #ValueRecogniseReward campaign T-shirt or participate in the other lawful bans. It is important that members, particularly younger members participating in a campaign for the first time, understand the Fair Work Act 2009 allows for ‘protected industrial action’. This means it is legal for nurses to take industrial action provided all of the requirements of that Act are met.

Protected industrial action is legal and severe legal consequences can follow if a manager is found to have coerced an employee not to take part, or to breach a ban (asking you not to wear a campaign T-shirt or asking you to complete non-clinical data collection). This is called adverse action and under the Fair Work Act the individual manager and the employer can both be fined.

ANMF members who are participating in action covered by the protected industrial action bans are entitled to refuse to do that task or tasks, and it would almost certainly be unlawful for management to take action against them. Managers may be breaching the Fair Work Act if they counsel, discipline or report a nurse for taking protected action, or threaten to do those things.

Managers, who can feel like the ‘meat in the sandwich’, should also be aware they have the same legal rights as the employees they manage. Often managers feel obliged, or are even directed, to oppose the industrial action and ensure as far as possible that the activities of the ward continue. This can then result in conflict with staff on one hand and management on the other.

Managers have a right at any time to refuse an unlawful directive, including one that relates to them or the staff taking lawful industrial action.

3. Sign the petition

The mental health nurses’ petition has kicked off well but it needs more signatures if employers are going to take notice.

Make sure you sign it and use the sharing buttons to encourage your friends and family to support this important petition.

7. Raise the volume

We need intelligent and articulate mental health nurses who can speak with authority on camera about the important work you undertake every day. If you are interested in being part of a series of online videos for the mental health campaign and the fight for ratios, please get in touch. Media training is provided, and the ANMF will ensure you are protected for advocating for your profession. If you’re interested, please drop us an email with your full name, role and some suitable times for us to follow up over the phone. Email us at media@anmfvic.asn.au

8. Spread the red – get involved to ensure our communities can access mental health nurses

Update your social media profile pic and share our posts and your pics. Participating Area Mental Health Services (wards, units and community teams) have been awash with red since Thursday 19 May sending a strong message to employers that fair pay and safe workloads are critical issues for mental health nurses.

ANMF encourages members, including those employed at facilities unable to take protected industrial action, to get active on social media.

Visit the ANMF Facebook page at www.facebook.com/RespectOurWork and look through our album of campaign profile and banner images you can use on your Facebook and Twitter accounts. Share your red T-shirt imagery online using the hashtags #ValueRecogniseReward, #MHRatios, #RewardMHnurses for Twitter and Instagram. You can also post your photos to the ANMF Facebook page, or tag us on Twitter @ANMVFicBranch
